

(SPOT)light

Sepsis Pathophysiological & Organisational Timing

Evaluating how critical illness changes over time, and whether these changes might be important in delivering care

This hospital is participating in a research study evaluating the importance of the timing of critical illness. Trained staff collect routine data about the severity of illness both on the ward before admission to Intensive Care, and at the time of admission.

Further information can be found in the leaflets available from any member of the critical care or outreach team.